This man was sentenced in 1887 to eight years in the penitentiary for entering the residence of G. W. Cook at Bonsacks and stealing money therefrom. He was a railroad hand, and originally came to Salem in 1883 as a nurse in the smallpox hospital here.

A telegram in answer to one sent by The Times was received last night from Wartburg Seminary. It says that Professor Crabtree's shoulder blade was fractured and that he sustained some other bruises. Monday was red letter day in Justice Camper's court. The case of the commonwealth vs. Wade Clark, Charles Clark and Newton Lemon, charged with throwing rocks and shooting a pistol into the house of Widow Dove, a resort of soiled doves, in the Bend neighborhood some nights ago. The evidence was of such a spicy and sensational nature that even the modest 'squire blushed and at times his hair stood on end. The testimony tended to show that the above house was a "shady" resort and that drink was the principal cause of the disturbance. After hearing the evidence Wade Clark and Newton Lemon were put under a bond in penalty of $50 each for good behavior for twelve months. The next case was that of common wealth vs. Fally Goodwin, who was charged with malicious assault upon Wade Clark at the house of Esther Clark in the Bend neighborhood. The evidence showed that a family row was in progress and Attorneys Montgomery and Baer were until $:30 at night disposing of the counter suits of assault and carrying concealed weapons brought up as a result of this case. Some were dismissed and others sent on to the grand jury. grand jury.
